

Answer: Five Qualities of Allah’s Servants with Exceptions and Rewards

The Qur’an beautifully describes the qualities of Allah’s true servants (‘Ibadur Rahman) in Surah Al-Furqan (25:63–75). These qualities guide Muslims toward righteous character and behavior, while also mentioning exceptions and great rewards.

1. Humbleness and Patience:

First, Allah’s servants are humble and patient. They walk on earth with humility and respond peacefully to ignorance.

Allah says: “The servants of the Most Merciful are those who walk on the earth humbly...” (Qur’an 25:63).

The exception is arrogance and harsh behavior, which Allah dislikes.

2. Devoted in Worship:

Second, they are devoted in worship, especially during the night.

They pray sincerely in prostration and standing (Qur’an 25:64).

Neglecting prayer is an exception that weakens faith. The Prophet ﷺ said: “The best prayer after obligatory prayers is the night prayer.” (Muslim)

3. Fear Allah:

Third, they fear Allah’s punishment and constantly seek protection from Hellfire (Qur’an 25:65). Ignoring accountability and the Hereafter is a serious exception.

4. Moderate in Spending:

Fourth, they practice moderation in spending—neither wasteful nor stingy (Qur’an 25:67). Extremes in wealth usage go against this quality.

5. Maintain Pure Belief and Moral Conduct:

Fifth, they maintain pure belief and moral conduct. They avoid Shirk, murder, and adultery (Qur'an 25:68). However, Allah makes an exception for those who repent sincerely, believe, and perform righteous deeds. Allah promises: "He will replace their evil deeds with good." (Qur'an 25:70)

Reward:

Allah promises such servants the highest place in Paradise, where they will be welcomed with peace and honor (Qur'an 25:75). This reward is due to their patience, repentance, and obedience.

Thus, these qualities define true servants of Allah and lead to eternal success.
